Knights Bravely Contest and Gallantly Crown Queen and Maids of Honor.

DEMOCRATS READY FOR WORK

Petersburg Wants Senator Danicl—Negro Confesses to Forgery Charge.

[Special to The Times-Dispatch.] PETERSBURG, VA., October 2.—The most delightful social event of the season was the tournament given this atternoon under the ausploes of the Riverside Club, with the coronation ball at night in the clubhouse. The weather was perfect, the riding course in splendid condition, and a very large assemblage of Petersburg folk withnessed the tilting. Each knight was inspired to efforts of success for the honor of crowning his chosen maiden as the queen of love and beauty of maid of honor, and each received plaults or approval and encouragement as he entered the course ready for the tilt.

Fourteen knights, well mounted and hopeful, were entered for the contest, as follows: Thomas Holden, 'Knight of the Pokanoket': Roan Ruff, of the Pokanoket': Roan Ruff, Tot t

"Knight of White Rock": Paul Petiti,
"Knight of Fluvanna"; George Harrison, "Knight of Night Before Last."
Drawn up in order in front of the grandstand, the knights were charged in graceful and eloquent terms by Richard H. Mann, Commonwealth's Attorney for Petersburg.
The judges appointed for the tournament were William B. McIlwaline, Joseph W. Seaward, J. McI. Ruffin and Dr. H. G. Leigh.
The patronesses were Mesdames William B. McIlwaline, Alexander Hamilton, George Cameron, Sr., A. K. Davis, David Dunlop, Charles Hall Davis, Bartlett Roper, John McGill, N. T. Patteson, R. O. Egerton, W. A. Bragg, Jas. B. Banks, T. F. Heath, W. L. Venable, J. McI. Ruffin, E. C. Kent, Robert Hall, J. H. Clalborne, A. D. Hamilton, George Cameron, Jr., and W. E. Poole, The Tilting.

The Coronation Ball.

The coronation ball was openen at 9 o'clock to-night, and in honor of the event, the clubhouse was elaborately and beautifully decorated, and the coronation scene and ceremonies evidenced all the dignity and grace of the tournament balls of olden times. The fair maldens elected by the successful knights as "Queen of Love and Beauty" and maids malds of honor, were served. The successful knight of the "Open of the honor of crowning the Queen of Love and Beauty, received a very hand-some solid silver cup.

The chaperons at the ball were: Mesdames H. G. Leigh, R. A. Martin, Jr., Charles E. Plummer, Cari H. Davis, Gill, H. C. Myers, Mortimer Williams, William Mahone, W. H. Patteson, G. H. Westbrook, R. D. Cronly, F. C. Spencer and George W. Pegram.

The coronation address was then delivered by Congresman Francis Rives Lassiter in language chaste and eloquent, as follows: The Coronation Address.

The Coronation Address.

"The Coronation Address.

"To-night let us forget the cares of life, the toil of business and the pursuit of gain. Seek gold only in the tangles of Naeara's hair, and silver in her scintiliant eyes. Let no strife come nearer than the rivalry of our horsemen, and no duty save homage to graceful girls. The simple ceremonial of to-day has little place in the society whose jaded appotite demands games the stakes of which are dishonored lives. It is becoming that Virginia should preserve traditional simplicity as well as elegance. It is our birthright that in co-ordinate States, as well as in foreign lands, the simple title of a Virginian gentleman attracts a recognition more personal and distinctive than is given official rank or brand-new millions.

"Your president must shield me should I commit such erudities as detaining you too long or speaking vaguely of far-off, haif-forgotten things, for it is to his predilection that I owe the honor of this delightful office. Unused to gallantry, yet preferring ever to talk with one lady at a time, I simply could not resist his invitation to a party in that mystic realm:

"Land where neare armity to bed hight.

his invitation to a party in that myatic realm;

"Land of Love and Land of Mirth, Land where peace and joy had birth. Where the birds have ever sung, Arcady is always young."

"In Arcadia it is understood that in celebrating such feetivals, some young poet, with eyes now brooding, now mashing with inspiration, is called on to tell a tale of love and fidelity; silding the palpable and familiar with the golden exhaintions of the dawn. How content could I be to listen to such a singer; myself an unregarded unit in the gay setting of this stage.

"Dwelling remote from the fair, and long unaccustomed to hear of fidelity, it was at once apparent that I could not weave an original tale which would satisfy the obligation I have assumed. Like many a better man, I sought to crib facts and fancies from the few poets I have known. Theocritos was too pastoral, and Ovid mondaine through and through. Some one had borrowed my Boccaccio, and Margaret of Valois was not easily condensed. The loves of all the poets have been collected by an English lady, but English ladies see too much of the practical.

"In despair, I fell asleep and dream."

The loves of all the poets have been collected by an English lady, but English ladies see too much of the practical.

"In despair, I fell asleep and dreamed an old Arablan tale which fascinated me in my youth, and may attract you, for we, too, have been searching for a queen of love and beauty, and the story tells how one was found and how more than the priceless things of earth are virtue and beauty. The ancient kingdom of Ealsora lived a young King who had wasted the substance which a wise father had bequeathed him, and so earned the disfavor of his people that he sought voluntary retirement rather than be thrust from the throne. Repenting of his follies, and sadly meditating upon his wretched state, the King of the Genii appeared to him and disclosed a subterraneous treasure house, whose roof and walls were of crystal, and where forty urns on as many sheyes overnowed with golden coins. Searching further, a golden key was found which admitted him to an inner chamber, where he was blinded by the light magnideence, he was reanimated by an inscription on the ninth pedestal, which informed him that there was still a ninth statue in the world a fine father would conduct him to the place where it might be found.

"Losing no time on the journey, he
